HIGHLIGHTS OF THE FEBRUARY MEETING

The talk given by Judge Milton Holmes entitled "The Strange Parallel in the Careers of General Warren and General Pickett" was the type of talk that appealed to all of the members regardless of their individual preferences.

It concerned a General from the North and a General from the South; it brought out interesting details of several battles and it was tied in with many of the most interesting characters on both sides of the conflict, including General Robert E. Lee and Abraham Lincoln. The writer can recall few talks in which the attention of our somewhat peculiar audience was so completely engaged.

Although it is not necessary to prove anything in such an interesting discourse, it did prove the fickleness of military fame, and the fact that only the last battle can confirm or deny a General's reputation as an effective leader.
